

PSYCHIATRY RESEARCH TRUST

Registered Charity No.284286

Your donations make a real difference to the Psychiatry Research Trust and its support of today's research and the researchers of tomorrow.

Mental ill-health and brain disorder are devastating. No age is exempt – hyperactivity and autism in childhood, anorexia, alcoholism and drug addiction in young adults, motor neurone disease, depression, and chronic fatigue syndrome in adults, dementia and Parkinson's Disease in the elderly. And there are many more conditions that affect people of all ages.

Scientists at the Institute of Psychiatry in London are seeking better ways of treating and preventing mental illness and brain disorder. Acknowledged, along with its associated Maudsley and Bethlem Royal Hospitals, to be the pre-eminent teaching and research organisation in its field in the world, the Institute of Psychiatry and the Hospitals have for many years provided the leading practitioners and researchers in mental illness and brain disease to both this country and many others overseas.

In this connection, a major part of the Trust's purpose has always been the provision of grants to young researchers to enable them to undertake their first research studies – a sphere in which demand for help always far outstrips funds available.

Hence this appeal for donations. The Psychiatry Research Trust exists solely to help suffering people by raising funds for research by members of the Institute and associated hospitals, including that done by their junior staff.

It is a noble cause and your support is desperately needed.

Please give what you can to help us progress in securing better treatments for sufferers
